This is an update to the photo editor that's already on the iPad. Not much has changed. The update doesn't make anything better or worse. It's just an update. Besides, what aren't you doing on your iPad? (If you're reading this while avoiding an angry Siri, then you're not doing much of anything on your iPad, so I bet the update didn't affect you in any way.)

Apple has just announced that Photoshop for iPad is getting a major update to version 5, and will include some brand new features. The update will be free and will appear automatically to all iPad owners, which means you won't be charged for it on your iOS device. It includes new features like the support of PDF files in the Editor, new filters, masking options and control of the White Balance and Exposure sliders, as well as several bugfixes. Apple also has unveiled a brand new iPad cover for the iPads that comes free of charge in the App Store. For all the DRM notice-and-take-off that we had to do with Photoshop Lightroom, it's been finally been released on Apple's site . Apple hasn't updated it but it's the first of a couple separate but related items, first that the "PSD and PDF" icon has been changed to "Photoshop" (thus the icons for PS, PSD, PDF and EPS are all present on the menu and File menus), but also a separate Application folder for the install which features an Image Sequence, Photoshop, and PSD and PDF.
