and Samples. Boogie House Records presents the massive.Carnitine production from methanol by bioconversion of synthetic methanol with intact cells of Escherichia coli and Cupriavidus sp. For bioconversion of methanol to carnitine (a conditionally essential amino acid), aerobic cells of Escherichia coli and Cupriavidus sp. were cultivated in a synthetic medium containing methanol as a carbon source. A synthetic medium containing methanol (0.3% w/v) was prepared by adding 0.1% each of ethanol, glycerol, and methanol to the original medium containing lactic acid. Escherichia coli grew well under this condition, and the maximum specific growth rate and biomass concentration were 0.35 h(-1) and 2.3 g/L, respectively. Bioconversion of methanol to carnitine occurred with cells of Cupriavidus sp. under the following conditions: initial pH 6.0-6.5, 0.5% (v/v) methanol, and 50 mM potassium phosphate buffer. The carnitine concentration in the broth reached a maximum of 1.4 mM within 24 h. The molar yield of carnitine was about 50% of the molar substrate used., *Moduli
